

TAPSTER

It's OK to be Self Serving

The story of Tapster began in England in approximately 1617, when the nickname tapster first referred to a bartender serving alcoholic drinks (mostly beer) from a tap. This nickname lived on in remote English villages for about 200 years before slowly dying out in the 19th and 20th centuries. And just as the long waits for bartenders reached a feverish pitch at the beginning of the 21st century, tapster was reborn in Chicago. Unlike in Old England, however, the new tapster has become each and every one of us (each of us over the age of 21, of course).

OUR MISSION EMBODIES...

EDUCATION

When you enter Tapster we promise to always teach you something new, whether this includes pouring a proper pint of beer or what differentiates SLO from Calistoga wines.

EMPOWERMENT

Our self-pour technology empowers patrons with the ability to choose drinks at their leisure, educating themselves on different styles. And more importantly, it allows everyone the opportunity to sample a drink before committing to an entire pint.

ENVIRONMENT

Last but not least, we at Tapster are very conscious of the world around us, and we are committed to not producing large amounts of garbage. We do not serve any bottle or cans at Tapster. We aim to produce an incredibly small carbon footprint, and with this in mind, we will help keep our planet alive and well.
